"I desire to give notice," said Chairman Bland at the opening of the debate, "that at 2 o'clock to-morrow I shall demand the previous question on the Silver till and pending ameniments."

The first speaker of the day was Representative Pierce, of Tennessee, the able young lieutenant of Chairman Bland on the Coinage Committee.

"The voice of labor, then as now, was unheeded, and the result was that the next three years witnessed a period of depression, distress and suffering hitherto unknown in the kingdom of Great Britain. This is a matter of history and cannot be controverted."

Continuing, the gentleman from Tennessee showed that after the expansion of currency, resulting from the discoveries of gold in California and Australia in 1840 and 1850, labor in every commercial nation affected by this expansion advanced 45 per cent.

The spirit that is dominant to-day among financiers and capitalists throughout the world is that scarcity in money is a thing to be defired.
